(Image credit: Blizzard) After a rocky launch week with frequent server issues (opens in new tab) and bloated player queues, Blizzard announced that more than 25 million Overwatch 2 players logged into the game in the first 10 days. The number of players per day is almost triple Overwatch's original daily peak," the statement said. Normally, numbers this high aren't too high for launching the massive free-to-play shooter, but the road to Overwatch 2 was anything but ordinary. Despite being called a brand new game, Overwatch 2 is mostly just an expansion of the original game. Blizzard has spent years trying to explain what "2" actually means in Overwatch 2, causing confusion and frustration (opens in a new tab). Skepticism about the need for Overwatch 2 deepened in the weeks leading up to its release as Blizzard made detailed changes to the original Overwatch that players didn't like, such as locking new characters (opens in a new tab) behind battle passes, introducing expensive cosmetic packs, and requiring new accounts to unlock old characters in 100 games (opens in a new tab). All the bad news and the internet's general distaste for Activision led many to call it a "dead game" before it even came out. Turns out a lot of people are playing Overwatch 2 outside of the original game. As we've seen with reboots of other previously paid games like Rocket League (opens in a new tab) and Fall Guys (opens in a new tab), the free ones play a big role. I won't speak for the whole 25 million but my friends and I rave about the major design changes that left us all nervous when we first heard about them - 5 out of 5 seems pretty good and the same goes for the new maps, push mode and new heroes. Our reviewer Tyler Kolp is more critical so far (opens in a new tab), calling Overwatch 2 "a sloppy sequel that tries to erase one of the best shooters of the last decade." Car fans will surely find this latest AxesInMotion racing game interesting as it gives you access to all the amazing driving features.
