Android: contacts + is one of the most useful address books we have seen. Combine photos with information from all your connected services: Google and Google+, Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn and more. A touch opens a contact card, another call or e-mail to a friend, and some others take you with their digital lives. Your contacts are all shown with their photo portrait next to them (synchronized by Google+ or Facebook), and you can pass groups and favorites in order to see only people that matter for you. Contacts + features An integrated dialer, so you can navigate and call directly from within the app. The app will even unite duplicate contacts to keep everything organized. In addition to the above services, the app supports geolocation through Foursquare and text messages via WhatsApp. You can touch any of the icons on the left side of the screen to view the latest updates of your friends on any connected service.contacts + also has a home screen widget for quick navigation and call, view your contacts in a grid Photographic or a traditional list, features bright and dark themes it is possible to switch from an alternate, and even warns you to the birthdays of your friends, so you remind you to give them a call or send them a message. Since our favorite address for Android was acquired by Yahoo (and then is no longer available to download), contact + is a more welcome alternative. The app works just as well on Android tablet as on telephones and has a tablet version optimized for large screens. Better than everything, the app is totally free. If you have a Google account, your phone will inevitably sync and then you will probably have duplicate contacts and will only be a mess. Start your e-mail app from your home screen or your Android phone's tray. Open the e-mail containing your VCard file. Tap the Download button next to the VCard file to download it. Scroll down from the top of the screen to reveal the notification tone. Touch the download notification completed to open the VCard file. Source: Android Central Depending on the phone you have, you will be able to save your contacts on your device or on the Google Contacts app. If everything else fails, try to visit Android.com/switch, which takes you through the use of Google Drive to transfer everything from your iPhone to the new Android phone. You will need to use Safari to do so. Some accessories to start here are some accessories to help you start with your new Android phone! Whether you want to buy apps, games, movies or audiobooks, you can buy Digital Google Play gift cards from $ 25 and go up to $ 100 to build your digital library. Having a reserve charger is always a good idea, and this from AuKey supports quick charge 3.0 and has two USB ports in a natural size for greater comfort. We could earn a commission for purchases using our links. Find out more. No other mobile operating system manages interactions between the apps quite as well as Android. With the release of Android 6.0, Google took this idea and a further step is gone. We use dozens of apps every day, different for communication. Instead of sharing everything to everyone every time, it makes a lot of way to make it easier to share something with one person, especially someone who communicates on a regular basis. The function is called Direct Share, and makes it incredibly easy to share something from any app directly to someone with whom you talk regularly. Here's how it works. On all that you use on Android has some kind of sharing function. E cooked in cloud storage app, social networks, photographic editors and a surprising number of games for people who want to show their high score. The sharing function in Android allows you to send a link or file for practically any other app on the phone, which makes organizational connections for a search project or photo sharing and even the occasional super easy mem. Direct Share adds a new section to the list of available sharing targets, only instead of apps those sharing targets are more specific. In most cases, those sharing objectives are people. Specifically, the people with whom to communicate on a basis if an app supports the direct quote, you will see the people who communicate more frequently in those apps. There are some exceptions, for example Google Drive Drive allows you to direct the fee with the folders you use frequently. The key here is a person or part of an app that uses frequently. Share Direct allows the apps to make the information available to the user, which in turn make it so that the information can be shared with fewer steps in half a half Sharing button and destination. In the event that more applications are used for communication, or there are more frequent use applications that uses Direct Share in different ways, you will notice that no application can use all the available space in this direct Share sector. The contact bubble includes a small app icon to let you know where you are sharing to this contact, then while there is the potential for duplicates, it is not difficult to avoid. At the moment there is no way to give an app or a priority contacted on any other external part of your daily use and, consequently, this section can change frequently based on how to use the phone. The biggest challenge with the direct quota right now is actually using the function. Currently the list of apps that supports the functionality does not even include the instant messaging service of Google reliefs, therefore there are not many apps that still support the function is something of a euphemism. The major applications currently support this feature are WhatsApp, Google SMS default app on Nexus and Google Drive phones. While we see more producers updates to Android 6.0, the direct quota is destined to be a functionality goal for more and more developers. Android offers you some options for transferring your contacts to a new device. By default, everything should be synchronized when setting a new device, but even if the synchronization is disabled, it is easy to move your contacts. The simple way: Synchronizes with your Google account Almost all Android devices sold outside China are provided with Google Services, including the possibility of synchronizing your contacts between devices. This should be enabled by default when you log in with your Google account, but it's how to make sure. You are writing this guide using a 2 XL pixel running Android 9.0, but it should be similar to other Android devices. You are also using Google Contacts apps, which you can download from the playback store. These steps may not be the same on other contact apps, so if you have problems, we recommend using Google Contacts. Start by opening the App's settings and touching the "Account" button. Touch "Sync" button. Make sure the "Contacts" button to deactivate is enabled. It must be turned on for your contacts to synchronize. This tool Your existing contacts will synchronize with your Google account, and will be there on any new Android phone. Log in. Manual mode: Backup and restore the contact file If your phone does not offer Google services ... or if you just want to copy things to yourself ... you can back up a .vcf file that has all yours Contacts inside. Start by opening the contact app, then select the menu icon at the top left. Once again, we are using the Google Contacts app here. Tap the "Settings" button in the menu. Tap the option "Export" on the settings screen. Tap the "Allow" button on the authorization prompt. This will provide access to the contacts to the photos, media and files on your Android device. Touch the "Save" button at the bottom right. You can move the .vcf file into the new phone by copying it to a USB unit, transferring it to a PC or your favorite cloud service. When you get the file moved to the New phone, open the contact app again. Touch the menu icon at the top left. Touch the "Settings" button in the menu. Touch the "Import" button. On the Settings screen. Select the "VCF" button in the window that opens. Browse the .vcf file from your previous phone and open it. Your contacts import to your new phone and you can Call and messages to your favorite people. people. people.
