This film is undoubtedly based on Larry Davis' incident in the late 1980s, when the corrupt police tried to tame the drug seller who wanted to leave their "system" (sellers who paid police officers to other dealers). When it isBecause of her granddaughter's death, they attacked her home. He fought back, killed and wounded the officers, and escaped, leading to a dangerous raid in New York. When they finally caught him (a former relative connected to him) the police made false accusations and the media presented him as an absolute thug who got away after killing the cops when he didn't want to run away with organizations with people. Cops and drug dealers. He is still serving his sentence at Rikers Island, fighting for a new challenge. See the documentary The Larry Davis Story, which won Best Documentary at The Urbanworld Film Festival 2003. It serves cinema well, though, and Sidney Lumet is brilliant. The act reflects the emergence of New York in the early 1990s. It has a "city prince" vibe.
